SUPPLEMENTARY: Steven Leigh Morris's absurdist satire looks at the corrosive pressures of click-bait journalism and cut-throat competition on newspapers around the country, as they struggle to report the truth in a post-fact world. A funny, often biting, brand new play about the plight of local newspapers, RED INK follows a journalist who is hired by new management to run the paper he has been working for, and loves. In the wake of a corporate merger, can he keep the standards he aspires to? Can he keep his family and friends? His sanity?
